At the clinic, each participant works with Kathleen for about an hour each day, addressing their individual goals and questions. This allows each rider to work on different topics if they wish. Spectators are welcome at these clinics and questions are encouraged.

There are several core ideas in which Kathleen believes, which form a foundation for her approach to horsemanship.

1. Horses are smart, willing, hardworking creatures.
2. If a horse is having trouble doing what we want or need, he either can't (physically and/or mentally) or doesn't understand the request.
3. Horses desire clear, concise communication and leadership.
4. A quiet mind is the optimal mental state for horse and rider.
5. Build on the good that is already present.
6. The five basics that a horse and rider will take with them into everything they do are: go, turn left, turn right, stop, and back.
